

Election Day is tomorrow! And here in California, nearly 12 million ballots have been cast so far — by mail and in person. We're on track to surpass the record participation we saw in 2008 and I hope you'll do your part to help us reach this important milestone in civic engagement.

In California, we're known for finding more ways and expanding the number of days that voters can cast a ballot safely and securely. And in spite of Republicans' best efforts to suppress turnout, voters are standing up to make their voices heard across the country. States like Hawaii and even Texas have already surpassed 2016's vote totals.

In these final hours of this historic election, I wanted to share a few resources that may come in handy.

If you're in my home state of California, we have voter tools and resources in one easy location: vote.ca.gov. You'll be able to find where to vote, details on same day voter registration, and how to track your ballot.

If you live outside of California, please visit IWillVote.com for details on how to vote in your community.

If you've already voted or aren't eligible to, please keep this information handy and share it with voters who could use your help, or sign up to volunteer to make phone calls with your favorite campaign or voter turnout organization.

No matter what happens tomorrow, know this: I'll be working with my counterparts across the country to make sure your vote is received, counted, and certified.

Thanks for voting and sharing this important information,

Alex Padilla
California Secretary of State
